OVERVIEW

This workshop equips education stakeholders with the tools and mindset to design and support learning environments that prepare children not just for exams—but for life. It blends pedagogical innovation with ethical grounding, promoting an education that builds confident, thoughtful, and capable young citizens. Participants will examine core pillars of modern education, including critical thinking, emotional intelligence, creativity, digital literacy, and civic responsibility. The workshop highlights the shift from rote learning to student-centered approaches that foster curiosity, adaptability, and collaborative learning.

Audience

Designed for educators, school administrators, curriculum developers, parents, NGO workers in education, child psychologists, and public sector professionals shaping national education strategies. Also relevant to private school investors and social entrepreneurs in the education field.

Instructors

Led by education specialists, child development experts, curriculum designers, and digital learning innovators with field experience in modern pedagogical approaches and child-centered policy design.
